I'm successfully establishing the connection, but I'm not sure how I need to proceed to do everything else. The example that I have is of a server that accepts connections. It establishes a connection with the client, but does not initiate the handshake. I have two requirements to meet and I'm struggling to meet both of them at the same time. First, from the server, I need to initiate the Handshaking and on the client side there is no requirement to do anything except accept the connection. That means I'd have to be able to sit on the server side and expect the client to connect back. Second, I can't have my server start sending things to the client at the same time that the handshake is establishing. I need to be able to send things from the server side and not have the client do anything, but be able to receive the signal that the handshake is done, so that I can send more things.

Unfortunately, the articles that I've read, describing this process don't even mention the handshake. They just mention the concept of establishing the connection and then doing what you need to do over the connection. As a side note, this is where I'm at now with my own implementation:

```
public void voidAttachAcceptingHandler(Socket socket) { //if(socket!= null) //{ //SocketStreamProvider provider = socket.AsStreamProvider(); //provider.Value += context => //{ ////this.socket = context.Socket;

Chloroaniline is a compound that in bacterial tests is a mutagen and in mammalian tests is not mutagenic. The mechanism of mutagenic activity of this compound and of N-nitrosodimethylamine was studied. With N-methyl-N'-nitro-N-nitrosoguanidine as a positive control mutagen for bacterial tests and benzo[a]pyrene as a positive control for mammalian tests, chloroaniline was compared with trichloroaniline with respect to their mutagenic activity and the role of metabolic activation in their mutagenicity. Cytosol preparations from rat liver, sheep liver and pig kidney were used as extracts for the evaluation of mutagenic activity. In the presence of rat-liver microsomes chloroaniline was mutagenic for Salmonella typhimurium TA100 only with no appreciable mutagenicity of trichloroaniline. Chloroaniline showed no mutagenicity in the absence of S-9 (with the exception of TA98) as did trichloroaniline. Bacterial tests with trichloroaniline in the absence of S-9 were positive. The results indicate that the mutagenic activity of chloroaniline is due, at least in part, to its metabolic activation by liver microsomal enzymes. The present invention relates to slide fastener chain strands and particularly to such strands having improved transverse strength and resistance to fusing or welding together of overlapped chain link elements. Slide fastener strands are widely known 3da54e8ca3
